

My car needed fixing.

I had it towed away.

I got the garage to fix it.

My car got hit as I was leaving!

I hit the other driver!

The other driver had the police officer arrest me!

Presentation

Use have and get in different ways to say that we cause something to happen or cause somebody to do something.

have/get* + something + past participle

Use have/get + something + past participle when we pay somebody to do something for us. We don't say who does the job. Get something done is more informal than have something done.

I had the car towed away.

We also use have/get + something + past participle to say that we experience something bad.

My sister got her phone stolen last night. (She didn't want this to happen.)

We never say who did the action with this structure.

have* + someone + infinitive (without to)

Use have + someone + infinitive (without to) when we ask or tell somebody to do something for us: The other driver had the police office arrest me!

We always say who did the action with this structure.

get* + someone + to + infinitive

We also use get + someone + to + infinitive when we ask or tell somebody to do something. We use this in any context (not just with people we have power over). It is informal.

I got the garage to fix it.

We always say who did the action with this structure.
